Windows 10 Home: Windows 10 Home : Network service for automatic Windows Update, Windows Store, and app updates - Microsoft Store Data Connectivity Connection Service - the network service that automatically connects Windows devices in your home to the Microsoft Store, Windows Store, and app updates - Microsoft Store Data Connectivity Connection Service Introduction - Windows 10 The Network service on Windows 10 and Windows Server version 2008 R2 supports automatic connection to the Store, Store content, and automatic update connection to Windows devices in your home. The Network service is similar to the Windows Update client, which automatically connects to Microsoft Update servers over the Internet, but it uses the Store service to connect to the Store and to Windows devices in your home. For more information about Windows Update and the Windows Store, see Windows Update Service and Windows Store. A device running Windows 10 can use the Store service to download Windows updates, app updates, Store updates, and apps from the Windows Store. To use the Store service, install the Microsoft Store software package on a device running Windows 10, available for Windows 10 devices with a PC or Intel x86-based tablet or 2-in-1 device. The Store service connects a device to the Store servers to automatically download and install Store updates. For more information about Store updates, see Automatic installation of Store updates on devices running Windows 10. The Store service connects a device to the Store server through the network. You can choose either to connect to the Store server from the Internet or to the Store server from your local network. For more information, see Connect to the Store from the Internet. If the Store service is installed and configured correctly, the Network service automatically connects the Windows 10 device to the Store and other services. A device running Windows 10 might not automatically start the Network service, which is usually started when the Device Host Service is started. Use of the Store service depends on your organization's information technology (IT) policies and procedures and the availability of services and resources in your network. It is usually only applicable to devices running Windows 10. For more information, see Windows devices in your organization. To start the Network service f678ea9f9e
